

Health

Everyone deserves good healthcare, including people with intellectual and developmental disabilities (IDD), because health is an important part of well-being.

ISSUE

People with IDD often have a harder time getting good medical care. Sometimes doctors don't understand their needs and getting the right health services can be hard and expensive. People with IDD haven't been involved in making sure their healthcare needs are met, and that should change.

POSITION

To make sure people with IDD have the high-quality healthcare they deserve:

1. Healthcare should be accessible:
 - Health care providers should be prepared to provide care to people with disabilities.
 - People with disabilities should be able to get health care where everyone else gets care.
2. Treatment should be fair:
 - People with disabilities should get the same good care as everyone else.
 - Providers and insurance companies should not discriminate in health and mental health care or privacy because of a person's disability.
3. Healthcare should be affordable:
 - People with disabilities need longer medical appointments than other patients for their care, but insurance companies will pay about the same for short and long visits.
 - Doctors have limited time to schedule long appointments, so people with disabilities wait a long time to get seen. Insurance companies should more fairly cover the costs of the longer appointments people with disabilities need so doctors can see patients with disabilities as often as those without disabilities.
4. People with IDD should be provided supports to make informed healthcare decisions:
 - People with IDD should be able to have someone they trust to help them understand their health issues and make medical decisions.
 - Doctors should know that people with IDD can make their own choices about their healthcare and be ready to help them learn about their care.
